MINIMAL MARKING

Richard H. Haswell
The instructor's method of teaching is our greatest weakness. When I encountered a concept, the instructor would spend a lot of time explaining it, but the explanation was too abstract and lacked practical examples. This made it difficult for me to understand and retain the information. I also found that the pace of the lectures was too fast, with little time for questions or clarification.

The textbook was also not very helpful. It contained a lot of technical jargon and was difficult to follow. I found it more helpful to look up additional resources online or in the library to supplement my learning.

Overall, the class was very challenging, and I spent a lot of extra time studying outside of class. I think more emphasis should be placed on hands-on practice and real-world applications to help reinforce the concepts learned in class.
NANCY SOMMERS

STUDENT WRITING

RESPONDING TO "THROUGH OVERLOOKING DANGEROUS VULGAR"

3. See especially Shoshana Rally, "Emergencies, Errors, and Expectations: A Guide for the