The M.A. in Hispanic Studies is an interdisciplinary program that offers three different concentration areas of study: 1) Hispanic Linguistics, 2) Hispanic Literature, and 3) Hispanic Cultural Studies. Each one of these concentration areas is offered with both the thesis and the non-thesis options. They are strategically structured to help guide the student in selecting his/her courses and designing his/her curriculum/research agenda.

The program is supported by a faculty unit that is strong in interdisciplinary approaches to the study of language, literature, and culture. Affiliated faculty members from other departments complement the program with their expertise related to Hispanic issues in anthropology, geography, history, political science, and international studies.

Graduate Assistantships are offered to qualified full-time graduate students for a maximum of two years (full-time graduate students normally complete the program in two years). The Graduate Assistantship requires an average of 20 hours of service per week.
