Gender, Race and Nation

This course explores differing gendered experiences across racial, ethnic, cultural, and class divides. In the course, students will explore the question: What does it mean to think "globally" about the experiences of women? We will explore the similarities and differences among women’s experiences across a variety of topics. Some of the topics considered in the course include body image across cultures, women’s political participation across nations, women’s experiences of war and conflict, women and economics, and women’s activism across national and international contexts. This course meets general education course requirements for Social Sciences.

Survey of Feminist Theory

This is an introductory course in feminist theory. The aim of this course is to provide students with a broad introduction to a wide array of feminist thinkers and feminist theories. We will explore a variety of topics including feminist theories related to bodies, reproduction, sexuality, feminist perspectives on science, intersectionality, global feminisms, and numerous other topics. In addition to simply learning about different theories, the goal is for students to begin to think, write and speak about these theories in a critical manner. Lastly, this course asks to students to consider the connections and disconnections between these theories and their own experiences as gendered beings.

Female Friendships: Fictional Critical Perspectives

Women have often been told that we are terrible at being friends because we are unkind and competitive in relation to each other. It is commonly assumed, moreover, that we will abandon our women friends for romantic relationships. "Female Friendship: Fictional and Critical Perspectives" will address these issues by engaging students in detailed readings of primary and secondary sources portraying friendships between two girls or women and requiring that they think analytically about the ways the authors studied characterize female friendships. We will examine how six novels and two memoirs, taking place in various time periods and racial and cultural milieus, portray female friendship. In each portrayal, we will study how the friendship between the two female characters begins and how it changes over time as the characters age. We will also read two recent studies, each seeking to define the specificity of friendships between women. We will examine how these studies relate to the novels and memoirs.

Black Feminist Theory
Black Feminist Theory and Activism is a course that centers black women’s rich intellectual traditions and political commitments in the United States. Over the course of the semester, we will critically examine the theoretical underpinnings and politics of modern black feminist thought. Students will be introduced to both historical and contemporary black women intellectuals and activists through reading assignments, in-class exercises, films, and written assignments. The course gives equal weight to the articulation and praxis of black feminism, focusing on several black feminist activist moments and movements from the past thirty years.

The first five weeks of the course will focus on the emergence and evolution of black feminist thought. Students will read some of the key scholars and activists whose work has defined the field. The remaining ten weeks will be focused on activism. We will examine some of the critical issues around which black feminists have organized—sexual harassment, police violence against black people, prison abolition—and learn what a black feminist approach to social change and social justice looks like.
