

LSU | School of Veterinary Medicine

TEACH • HEAL • DISCOVER • PROTECT

The LSU School of Veterinary Medicine is dedicated to teaching, healing the world, discovering the future, and protecting the well-being of others. Our LSU Veterinary Teaching Hospital sees more than 21,000 cases each year, and it is our goal to give each patient and animal owner the most compassionate and professional care possible. Our students come from all over the globe and are given the opportunity to receive their DVM, MS or PhD.

As a leading biomedical research facility, our researchers study diseases that affect both humans and animals. Diseases studied at the LSU SVM include cardiovascular disease, cancer, herpesvirus, coronavirus, as well as neurological and infectious diseases. Some of these diseases affect humans; some affect animals; but many affect both. Our passion for research and healing stems from years of saving lives.

We want to share our passions by opening our world to you with events like the LSU SVM Open House, the Annual Conference, Pets and Vets, the Exhibition on Animals and Art and the Great Rover Road Run. Along with saving animals, we want to help the world and all of the incredible beings in it.
